VANDERPOOL BRINGS COLUMBUS EXHIBIT TO SHELTON STATE

Photographer Rick Vanderpool, spurred by the 500th anniversary of Columbus' landing in the New World, has put together a traveling exhibit entitled "A Columbus Mosaaic" that is now on exhibit through Nov. 25th in the library of the Skyland campus .

Vanderpool's goal with the project is to capture a cross-section of America by focusing on its Columbus towns. The largest Columbus town he visited was in Ohio with a population of 895,000 while the smallest one was in Missouri with a population of 24, where he departed as honorary mayor.

Altogether he discovered 70 Columbus namesakes, though almost half no longer appear on the map. He assigned these various Columbus communities to one of three categories: "Once upon a time;" "By any other name;" and "Here and now."

The "Once upon a time" communities consist of 24 historic locations, from ghost towns in Colorado to cemeteries in the south to the likes of Columbus Manor, Illinois.

"By any other name" communities are existing towns once known as Columbus and since renamed. "Here and now" are the 40 Columbus cities, towns and villages that exist today. According to Vanderpool, all have their own unique personalities derived from their histories, architecture, regional mannerisms, local delicacies, civic endeavors and natural settings. The hours for the exhibit will be Monday-Thursday, 8 a.m. - 9 p.m. and Friday, 8 a.m. -4 p.m. For additional information, contact Deborah Grimes, director of library services, 391-2233.

SHELTON'S WELLNESS INSTRUCTOR AUTHORS ARTICLE FOR JOURNAL

Milady Khoury-Murphy, director of Shelton State's Wellness Center, and Michael Murphy, an anthropologist at the University of Alabama, recently published an article, 'Southern (Bar) Belles: The Cultural Problematics of Implementing a Weight Training Program Among Older Southern Women," in the refereed journal, PLAY AND CULTURE.

The article deals with the misconception once held by women enrolled in the college's Senior studies program concerning weight training and how these cultural obstacles were overcome by Dr. Khoury-Murphy.
